There are a few fundamental things you need to remember while writing your resume. It should be neat, without any spelling or grammar mistakes, and it should be pleasing to the eye at first glance. This means that you shall never start your resume on brightly colored paper. White paper is best and your printer or copier ribbon should be dark. It's important to consider what your most favorable qualities are. Although every job is different, there are some aspects of your educational or employment history that will get the attention of the potential employer. Highlight these achievements during resume writing. If there is some task that you've accomplished that will work in your favor during the review process then include that prominently on your resume.
